

Anton was a young Viking who lived in Norway, a land of big tall mountains and sparkling fjords.

He was a member of the mighty Halvor clan who were well known for their bravery and strength.

Anton's grandfather had told him wonderful tales of a time when his ancestors sailed across the big blue sea, eager to explore new lands.

Anton lived in a log cabin with his family, overlooking the water.

He was very happy, except for one problem. He was small. Very small.

As he listened to his grandfather's stories he wondered if he could ever be as big and brave as all the other Vikings in his family.
